Read the full change log When browsing the web for interesting articles, ads can become very annoying as they usually distract users from the actual content. Those who use Google Chrome as their choice sheets can install a dedicated extension that can help them get rid of such banners, namely Adblock Plus for Chrome. If the add-on has not been downloaded from Chrome Web Store, users must first open the browser's Extensions section (main menu >Tools>Extensions), and then drag and drop the extension to install it. Adblock Plus for Chrome adds a new button to the browser, and users can easily enable or disable the extension, according to their choice. By default, all the retrieved ads and banners have been disabled and they are replaced with empty areas, so users can focus on reading their articles without any distractions. In addition, the extension can be customized by creating filters for frequently visited webpages so that specific images or banners are hidden. This can be accomplished in two different ways: on the one hand, beginners can simply click on the ad they want to block, while more tech-savvy users can type the filter expression manually, as long as they're familiar with the right syntax (otherwise, the filter won't be efficient). Alternatively, users can also create a list with all the domains where Adblock Plus for Chrome shouldn't be active – they simply have to tap or paste the domain and then add them to the list. In a nutshell, Adblock Plus for Chrome is a customizable and useful browser add-on that can help users' improve when browsing websites regularly. However, if users prefer other browsers but still want to enjoy the same features of this extension, they can try Adblock Plus for Firefox, Adblock Plus for Opera, or Adblock Plus for Internet Explorer.
